Maggie writes across formats and genres. She's driven by curiosity, compassion and connection and fascinated by people -- "us" not "them".

Maggie had a successful journalism career in national magazines and newspapers, writing features and fiction, before completing a scriptwriting MA at Goldsmiths College London. She quickly found her feet on popular BBC drama Doctors and wrote many episodes. It was a fabulous learning curve in what could be achieved when creativity was limitless, even if budgets weren't.

Maggie's original work explores parenthood, families, identity, death, love, betrayal, courage, but with a twist. She is drawn to horror and darkness, but always with humour and compassion. The infinitely human search for meaning and belonging underlies all her writing but also her current media role, as astrologer for the Sun newspaper and Fabulous magazine, connecting with millions every day.
